"0", of course, means open string. Just before measuring 17, the left hand plays the B with a "1" finger, because in extent 17 finger "2" must crash quickly on an A, in the second half of the piece, some of the notes are finger in a different way than A at the first half, because the finger "2" is busy keeping the note "a" pressed on the string G for the entire second half. Hold it down! In size 20, we meet a note B again, once again fingers with a "1" even if the C in the next FRT is finger with a 3. Please scroll through the page for download links. For children who enter the classic guitar, go "cold turkey" outside the tablature can be very frightening. I like to help them with the first measures written in the card together with the standard notation. But sometimes, if they have warmed up to the standard notation, I give them this version instead: please scroll through the page for download links. Here is the piece as a lesson on YouTube: after playing entirely through this beautiful piece, it is possible to understand why it is called a "study" or "Etude" - all the fingers of the right hand obtain their turn to be part of a model , and is tired until the hand builds the strength. Don't overdo it at the beginning! I mean, you must be prudent with the small muscles of the arms and fingers. Here is a final version of Asturias, played by guitarist John Williams. The melody to Spanish romanticism is the most important element in the piece. You want to practice melody alone and get the phrasing and dynamic modeling to be the most of high quality possible. So, when the accompaniment is added, you try to keep the melody linked the most possible of high quality despite the changes of agreement and the fingering. The melody is the superior item as shown in the first two lines below. Balance the voices. You want melody to be the most important. The melody should leave the plot without interference by the bass or the accompaniment. The voice of bass is the next more important and can be quite present so that it can support through the measure. It is quite far away in the melody register, so don't interfere much. The accompaniment should be the most soft. Try to underestimate him so that he never interferes with the prominent melody. Practice the shapes of the sunshine agreements. Getting comfortable with the shapes of the agreements is another aspect of the piece that must be practiced. You can do it by practicing the combined notes in a measure or in a quarter of note.
